KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY, MANHATTAN, KS

Research

My research sits at the intersection of social epistemology and adult learning, with a particular focus on how people break free from hegemonic frames—the deeply embedded worldviews shaped by ideology, power, and social belonging. I study how adults in so-called “post-truth” societies navigate—and sometimes transcend—epistemic bubbles, echo chambers, and neoliberal discourses that shape public understanding of political issues.

Keywords: adult learning, social epistemology, epistemic bubbles, echo chambers, hegemony, neoliberalism, critical thinking
